

On a warm summer evening in the small town of Willow brook, a mysterious figure was spotted entering the old library. The library had been abandoned for years, with its grand oak doors creaking in the wind and its windows shrouded in dust. Residents often shared ghost stories about the place, claiming it was haunted by the spirit of its former librarian, Mrs. Eleanor Finch.

Emma, a curious teenager, decided to investigate after hearing strange noises while passing by the library on her way home. Armed with nothing but a flashlight, she entered through the slightly ajar door. Inside, the air was thick with the scent of old books and mildew. As she explored, she discovered an ancient, leather-bound book lying open on a wooden table. The pages glowed faintly, and strange symbols covered its surface.

Just as Emma reached out to touch the book, she heard footsteps echoing through the library. Turning quickly, she saw the silhouette of a tall figure standing at the end of the aisle.